My Story

In the smoke-filled speakeasies and dimly lit streets of Chicago, Amanda Atwood's story began. Born to a wealthy family, she rebelled against the conventional expectations placed upon her gender, choosing a life that embraced adventure and danger. Her fascination with aviation started at an early age when she witnessed her first airplane take flight at a local airshow. From that moment on, she knew she wanted to soar through the skies and explore the world from above.

Against her family's wishes, Amanda pursued her dream of becoming a pilot. She trained rigorously, obtaining her license and acquiring a reputation as one of the select few female aviators in a male-dominated field. Nicknamed the "Sky Siren," Amanda's skill, daring, and charisma quickly made her a local celebrity.

However, her life took an unexpected turn when her elder brother, Donald, who was a professor at Miskatonic University, disappeared during an expedition to the South Pole. The mysterious reports that came back from the survivors fueled Amanda's desire to find out what had really happened to her brother.
